CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

This chapter presents two points that relates to conclusion of the results of the study discussed in the previous chapter and suggestions that can be used to interpret cohesive devices in proper context.

5.1 Conclusion

The objective of this study is to explain and to identify the grammatical cohesion used in "The Miracle Worker" movie written by Fred Coe (1979) and also to describe the function of cohesive devices uses in this movie.

The conclusion is drawn from the analysis showing that all types of grammatical cohesion used by four main characters in this movie except nominal ellipsis. In 38 scenes are found 848 cohesive devices from grammatical cohesion. From 848 cohesion, 83% is personal reference. It appears 703 times. In other word, personal reference is the mostly type used within the movie. The most frequent reference is personal reference. Additive conjunction gets a second by 7% (55) times. Followed by demonstrative reference which appears 32 times (4%). Adversative conjunction follows by 11 time appearance or (3%). Comparative reference is (11), causal conjunction is (8), and temporal conjunction is (11) or 1% of appearance. The last are verbal substitution and verbal ellipsis, and clausal substitution appears twice, whereas nominal substitution and clausal ellipsis appear a time.

For the functions of grammatical cohesion found within the movie are expressed by some divisions. First, reference has three important functions are to avoid repeating the same words, to point out a scale of proximity, and to compare something or situation. Second, substitution and ellipsis simplify and accurate the utterance. The last is conjunction, it has six functions are to relate similar or identical words, to coordinate sentences which have the same context, to support previous sentence, to opposite the preceding statement, to connect between cause and effect in a sentence, and to connect chronology. Beside the functions are mentioned above, the general and basic function of grammatical cohesion is to relate words, clauses, phrases, or sentence in order to make the sentence meaningful.

In conclusion, the grammatical cohesion use in this movie is very important to formatting sense of sentence. The most frequent grammatical cohesion is appear in this study is personal reference. In the other word, personal reference is very important and has key position in constructing a meaning.

5.2 Suggestion

The present study has focused on grammatical cohesion use in "The Miracle Worker" movie. Grammatical cohesion is one of the types of cohesive device. The researcher suggests for future researcher to deepen cohesive devices exophora which are not found in this study. The study in cohesive devices exophora are rarely found. It may become a chance for the next researcher to investigate cohesive devices exophora. And the next researcher can use another object and angle. The previous studies mostly use research articles and academic publications as their data. So, it is more recommended to choose the other different data in order to present the different result of their data analysis. And the next researcher can analyze from the other angle like when the cohesive device are used or the other.
